River Flood Status/5 Day Forecast Rainfall

- The heavy rainfall and flash flood threat has decreased...but the rivers in Major and Moderate flood categories will be slow to respond.
 - The Brazos River near Richmond and Rosharon will likely remain in Major flood stage through at least next week.
 - The Trinity River at Liberty will remain in Major flood through the weekend.

Hazardous Weather

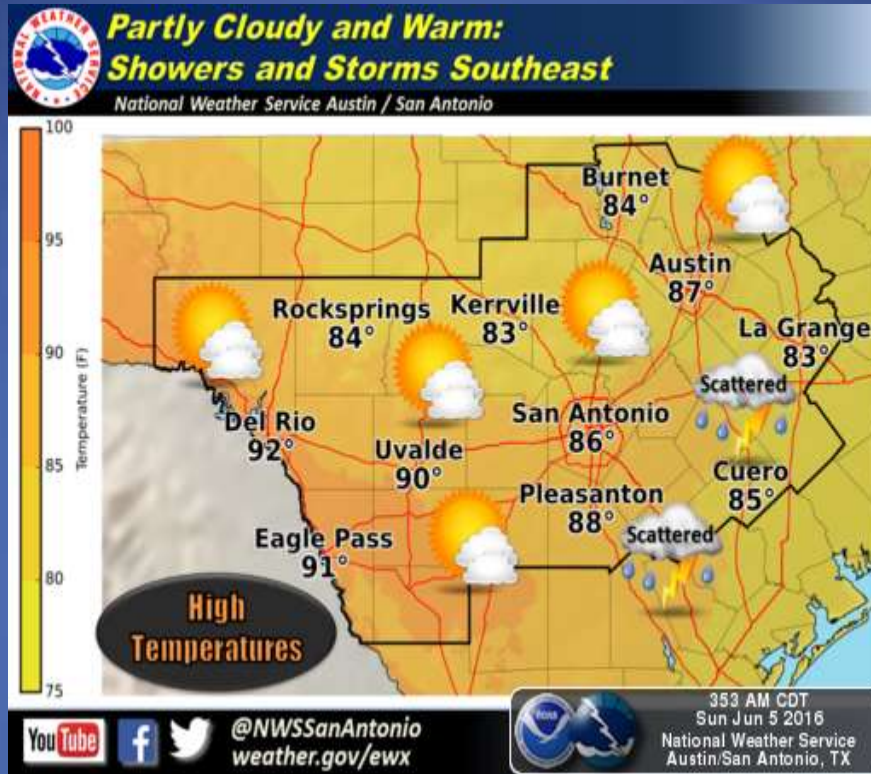

Scattered to numerous showers and thunderstorms are expected this afternoon and evening across most of South Texas. A few storms will be strong and contain gusty winds up to 45 mph. It will be drier across the western Brush Country. Highs will be in the lower to mid 80s east...upper 80s to lower 90s west.

That pesky upper level trough that has brought us rain the past few days has become elongated and will remain fairly stationary along the Texas coast today, while a late season cold front moves through the Rio Grande Valley later today. This means that the rain chances continue today, with shower and thunderstorms likely to start developing by late morning and early afternoon. The best chances for showers and thunderstorms today will be across the eastern half of the area, as drier air starts to infiltrate across the western half. Locally heavy rainfall is possible once again and could produce nuisance flooding in low lying areas that have received abundant rainfall the last several days.

Hazardous Weather

Isolated to scattered showers and thunderstorms are expected southeast of a Pleasanton to Gonzales to La Grange line due to an upper level disturbance near the Texas Coast. Locally heavy downpours and gusty winds are possible with the stronger storms. Otherwise, partly cloudy skies will prevail. Below normal temperatures are expected with highs in the 80s to lower 90s
